Here ye, hear ye! Attention all good ladies & gentleman!

Please remember to put modern conveniences to silent as to hush them before their majesties are presented. Many thanks!

Once upon a time, in a land quite far, a fair maiden lived high upon her castle. In slumber she waited for her prince to come, to carry her off into the sunset. Many days of despair later, her prince arrived gallantly on his white steed.

"Fair maiden, come forth and be presented to your Prince." (Bride starts to walk down the aisle)

"Prince _____, do you wish to take this fair maiden that you hold above all others as not only your love, but as your true wife, this day and every day after?"(Prince Answers, I do.)

"Fair, sweet maiden, do you wish to take this fine handsome Prince that you hold above all other as not only your love, but as your true husband, this day and every day after?"(Maiden answers, I do.)

"Great Prince, what token do you offer your Fair Bride?" (Rings are handed to the "Scribe {Officiant}")

Scribe: "These rich rings, which are a token of eternal devotion, represent no end, and no beginning. Love is as endless. You pledge yourselves today, in this company declaring to all in this vast kingdom that you wish to rule together side by side.

Prince _____, please place this token on the third finger of her left hand and declare your proclamation:

I, Prince _____, take you, Lady _____, to be my one true love. To walk beside you, to share in your joys, to comfort you in your sorrows and to bear all things as both your knight in armor and your only love. With this ring, I thee wed."

Lady _____, please place this token on the third finger of his left hand and declare your proclamation:

I, Lady _____, take you, Prince _____, to be my one true love. To walk beside you, to share in your joys, to comfort you in your sorrows and to bear all things as both your Lady and your only love. With this ring, I thee wed."

(Couple kneels in front of the "Scribe", Scribe touches one shoulder of each person with his/her hand)
(Crowns can be placed upon the heads of the couple)"

It is with great joy and great honor, that these two have declared such true love and intentions this day. May God above bless you both and may your home always be filled with love, laughter & joy! I now proclaim that you are, King _____ & Queen _____.

Arise, your Majesties! For it is with much proclamation that we jubilantly declare you are husband and wife this day!"
